

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a system for providing a regulated voltage meant to supply a load, including a source for providing a substantially constant current approximately corresponding to the maximum current likely to be surged by the load, and a device receiving the constant current and regulating the load supply voltage, at least one capacitor being connected between an output terminal of the regulation device and the ground.